This lecture aims to present the term sha'b in ancient Yemen in the light of the South Arabian inscriptions. The term sha'b is an expression allocated to the major social component of the ancient South Arabian society, which was a political and socio-economic unity and is well attested in all South Arabian kingdoms (Saba, Ma‘in, Qataban and Hadramawt). Actually, the Sabaeans' kingdom was a confederation of several sha'bs among them the sha'b of Saba and ruled by noble clans like Banū Maqār. The confederator of these sha'bs was the Sabean ruler mukarrīb.

Actually, it is difficult to define the accurate meaning and function of the term sha'b and its function in the ancient South Arabian society. However, scholars applied this term to a sedentary community with different sizes. It can be a small town, a number of various clans and communities or a federation of different communities.

The basic classification of the epigraphic nomenclature system in Saba, with some variations, is as follows: (i) the individual’s personal name (ii) his epithet or cognomen (iii) his partonic, i.e. the personal name of his father (iv) his clan or family name (v) the name of his tribe or the sha'b (ṣab) to which his clan belongs.

Subdivisions of the sha'b are primarily designated in the Sabean society as bin (bn), banū (bnw) and dhū (ḏ) “lineage; clan” and the family or household (byt). The clan and sub-clan was designated in the Minaean society as abīl.

Mohammed Maraqtan, born in Palestine and based in Germany is a specialist of Semitic Epigraphy and especially the ancient South Arabian inscriptions. He studied archaeology, ancient Near Eastern studies and Semitic languages at the University of Marburg/Germany and got his PhD 1987 from the same University. He worked at several German Universities and Vienna University. Currently he is at Qatar University. He conducted archaeological excavations and surveys in Jordan, Bahrain, Yemen, Oman, Morocco and Algeria. He published intensively on cultures and languages of the ancient Near East and in particular on the ancient South Arabian inscriptions and cultural history of pre-Islamic Arabia.