In honour of Georg Bühler’s achievements in the field of Indian epigraphy and his pioneering work on epigraphical poetry, this talk will discuss poetic devices, literary style, and compositional structures and strategies found in a number of early Sanskrit and Prakrit inscriptions up to the end of the sixth century CE. However, going beyond the typical eulogical praśasti inscriptions – that is to say the genre of epigraphical composition in praise of the ruler – this talk will examine the entire corpus of early Indic inscriptions, tracing the gradually increasing incorporation of formalising elements such as blessings or maṅgala verses, regnal years, royal genealogies, formulaic instructions providing political and administrative information, descriptions of donations, warnings, and dates. It will then further explore and analyse these elements in some selected inscriptions of the Indian Satavahana, Andhra Ikshvaku, Western Kshatrapa, Gupta, and Nepalese Licchavi kings.

Diwakar Acharya (PhD in Indology, University of Hamburg, 2004) is Spalding Professor of Eastern Religions and Ethics at the University of Oxford and a fellow of All Souls College. His research covers a wide range of topics in Sanskrit literature, Indian religious and philosophical traditions, and the early history of Nepal. His publications include Vācaspatimiśra’s Tattvasamīksā (Stuttgart 2006), The Little Clay Cart (New York 2009), and Early Tantric Vaishnavism (Paris/Pondicherry 2015). He has also published numerous articles on a wide array of topics in Indology, ranging from the early Upaniṣads to the philosophical systems of South Asia, from early inscriptions to pre-modern documents, and from poetry to ritual literature.
