Places to visit & shop in the 7th district's "Chicago" quarter

A new generation, new neighbors have arrived and they become our friends during the pandemic...

The neighbourhood is changing and becoming more international. There are a lot of new neighbours who are renting their apartments...

My family rented the apartment first, then we aquired it during privatisation. Tenants are changing, and I noticed that the public safety is declining...

Róth Miksa museum

The Róth Miksa Memorial House and Collection stands at Nefelejcs Street 26. Róth purchased the property in 1910 and adapted it to accommodate both his family home in the street-facing building and his stained-glass and mosaic workshop at the rear. The collection presents Róth's stained glass, mosaics and applied-art works while also illustrating the techniques behind them.

Roses square's landmark is the neo-Gothic Church of Saint Elizabeth of the House of Árpád. In the early 1870s, the area was still known as Cattle Market Square, before religious, educational and social institutions were constructed around it. Today the square serves both a neighbourhood gathering place and a small religious and cultural centre.

Sandwich bar community hub

The Szendvicsbár Community Hub opened in August 2022 at István Street 27 in a commercial unit that had stood empty for approximately ten years. Its reuse transformed an overlooked ground-floor interior into a flexible meeting place for local residents, independent artists and international communities.

City park alley forms a tree-lined urban connection between the district and City Park. Its built character differs from the district's dense perimeter-block fabric by combining villas, gardens, schools, religious buildings and former medical institutions. Nr. 47., the Kőrössy Villa was designed in 1899 by Albert Kálmán Kőrössy and Artúr Sebestyén in Art Nouveau style.
